CHICAGO, Illinois-The committee in charge of pre-convention work for RIGHTS OF WORKERS the National Labor Party expects a delegation at the national convention on Nov. 22 from every state in the union, according to Frank J. Esper, secretary of the committee. There Mr. Esper said to a representative of Moore, president of the Trades and The Christian Science Monitor, in eight souri, Illinois, Colorado, Wyoming, Indiana, New York, and Connecticut. Pennsylvania and Tennessee are now in the act of organization, and other states, he said, are waiting to see what the national convention will do.

There is some discussion here as to what attitude the Socialists will take toward the new Labor Party. Mr. Esper declined to give his opinion on this question. There are a few Socialists, however, who have taken part in the movement to organize state Labor parties. In Pennsylvania, for instance, James H. Maurer, a prominent Socialist, is president of the state federation, which has taken steps for organizing a Labor party, and in Illinois, Duncan McDonald, a former Socialist, is the president of the new state Labor party organization. Mayors have been elected in several small cities in Illinois by the Labor Party. The party is advocating nationaliza-

The foundation of American business—

As business grows and expands today, efficient filing methods become more necessary. These are the brick and stone and mortar of every commercial structure. These are the foundations that stand-up or collapse under the strain of sudden growth and expansion.

Go into ten large representative businesses in the country and ask what filing systems they use. The majority, we believe, will answer—"Library Bureau."

There are 75,000 Library Bureau customers. Gather them together as a filing community and you have a varied sky-line. But dig deep and you find three things fundamental in their filing systems-accuracy, speed and sim-

UR Buyer has purchased the whole stock of the 72 in. width British Government Aeroplane Linen on very advantageous terms. This Linen has indeed "caught on," and, with the sup running out, it is obvious that the price should correspondingly rise. So, in the interest of our customers, and to ensure their obtaining as much as they require. we have secured the remaining stock, viz., 500,000 yards, in the most useful width.

Customers are reminded that there are numerous qualities in this Linen. After exhaustive examinations by the Aircraft Inspection Department Experts the Linen was stamped with a letter denoting its quality, and of course K and T represent the best possible des. Of these qualities, in the 72 in. width, we have obtained all the material to be had.

We intend to offer the two qualities at the all-round price of 5/6 per yard—a figure which is actually less than the cost to the Government.

This Linen is in the UNBLEACHED COLOUR, but it will Bleach quite easily with washing. It is a material that will make BEAUTIFUL LINEN SHEETS of lasting wear, and our extremely low price will attract every thrifty Shopper.

Great Events Cast Their Shadows Before

THE WILLYS CORPO-RATION, headed by Mr. John N. Willys, has recently ded to its resources the magnificent manufacturing plants, patents, equipment and manufacturing talent of the Dusenberg Corporation of Elizabeth, N. J.

New construction will greatly increase the size and capacity of this large plant.

The Willys Corporation needs this immense plant for the production of a new and remarkable automobile - a Six cylinder car which marks a great forward development in the industry.

The new Six is fully developed, its most important features having had over 200,000 miles of the most painstaking and strenuous road test, extending over a period of more than two years. The car contains engineering features not embraced in any other six cylinder car. It is a climax of long experience in the manufacturing and distributing of motor cars; is standardized and will be produced in large quantities.

New principles of construction give the car unusual lightness of weight with perfect balance, and exceptional road ability. The car is fully equipped. Heretofore, engineering and manufacturing restrictions have placed a price upon six cylinder cars which has kept them out of the reach of thousands. For this reason, the New Six has an enormous field.

WILLYS CORPORATION

The Willys Corporation is one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the automobile industry. It owns and operates the Electric Auto-Lite business and also the New Process Gear business.

The Electric Auto-Lite business is, in itself, a vast industry, having to date manufactured and sold more than 1,400,000 sets of starting and lighting systems for automobiles. Orders and specifications are in hand for 4,000 outfits per day, beginning January, 1920. This Corporation also manufactures the well-known Willys Light-house and farm lighting outfit which has the unique advantage of being operated by the Willys Knight Motor. Orders for 20,000 Willys Light outfits to be delivered in 1920 were received in the month of August

The New Process Gear branch of the Willys Corporation is one of the largest producers of gears in the country, manufacturing many types of gears used in automobile transmissions and differentials.

A third plant owned and operated by the Willys Corporation is located at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., formerly owned by the FIAT Automobile Company.

All these plants contribute as sources of supplies for the new car.

Booklet giving further information about the plans and the new car program of the Willys Corporation will be sent on request.

Back of Your Bond

AS SAFE AS A GOVERNMENT BOND" has long been a favorite expression of the ultimate in security. The American people need no argument to convince them of the security of United States Government Bonds-their purchase of these bonds in unprecedented amounts indicates their faith in them.

Back of these bonds, as well as the bonds of foreign governments handled by Halsey, STUART & Co., stand the full faith and credit of a people-well able to pay its debts, and too jealous of its good name even to consider a default. With offices in the leading financial centers connected by private wires, we are prepared to give prompt and accurate quotations on all United States and Foreign Government Bonds. We buy and sell such securities at prevailing market quotations.

Your inquiry, regardless of the amount involved, will receive careful attention.

The new association has been named the Niagara Association of the Amateur Athletic Union and it plans to hold championship events in all sorts of sports. The meeting at which the association was organized was attended by F. W. Rubien, secretarytreasurer of the Amateur Athletic Union. The inclusion of groups of athletic clubs which are naturally affiliated through geographical reasons into new branches of the Amateur Athletic Union is in line with the policy of the parent body, which aims thus to encourage the more frequent holding of athletic meets and a more general participation in them. The more compact grouping solves the problems of many clubs which for reasons of distance, expense, etc., are often unable to arrange for representation in the meets of states or others of the larger associations.

Twelve clubs were elected to membership. Delegates were in attendance from Rochester and Syracuse and announced themselves as favorably inclined toward the new division of the national association. They will report back to their clubs for authority to take definite action. C. D. Reidpath, the 400-meter dash champion of the Olympic games of No 1912, was elected president of the N Niagara Association, and J. Pankow of the sixty-fifth regiment vice-president. The secretary-treasurer is E. T. Schaefer of the Buffalo Athletic Club, who is a former manager of the University of Pennsylvania track team. J. Y. Cameron of the Central Y. M. C. A. of Buffalo was elected chairman of the registration committee. Among Athletic Club, and John Blake of tity in many others. Niagara University.

There was very little cricket played on the 25th owing to the rain and this prevented any other results than draws being reached. Gloucestershire and Essex were playing at Clifton and the match ended there in a draw, as also did the Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire match at Nottingham. The Worcestershire cricket team were more fortunate against Warwickshire at Worcester, and alhough the damp wicket gave the bowlers considerable assistance, the Can match had to be left undecided when play ended, Aug. 26.

EXCITING FINISH IN CRICKET MATCH

Special to The Christian Science Monitor PORTSMOUTH. England - The county cricket match between Hampshire and Sussex had to be left drawn Aug. 26 at Portsmouth. The finish of the match was an exciting one, as Sussex required only 10 runs to win when stumps were drawn. The batting was opened by Hampshire, who were all out for 216, while Sussex's total was 40 runs less. Brown knocked up the useful score of 89 for Hampshire in their second innings and Mead carried out his bat for 55. When the Hampshire score had reached 200 the Hampshire captain made a sporting declaration and allowed Sussex to go in a second time. Sussex made a great effort to make the required runs, but the damp wicket was all in favor of the bowlers. However, V. W. Jupp knocked up 73 runs, while H. L. Wilson made the very creditable score of 104; but time was against the Sussex side, and they still required 10 runs to win when play ended. So far as the WITH SURREY TEAM bowling was concerned, the Monors went to Ryan, who took 7 wickets for Hampshire is the first innings for 60 runs. The summary:

> The great triumph of "Glauco" lends added interest to the forthcoming appearance of two new dramas by Morselli, "Belfagor" and "Dafni e Cloe, which will be performed at the beginning of the new theatrical season. The young dramatist is of singularly optimistic outlook, despite a career that would have led one to look for different results. Neglect, say his friends, never embittered him, will his new success turn his head.

Two Great Points of the Treaty

It is too soon to say what effect President Wilson's ern tour has had upon the attitude of the United Senate toward the Peace Treaty, but that the effect out the country has been definitely in the direction solidifying opinion in favor of prompt ratification out change or reservation already seems obvious. As esult of the President's speeches, the treaty and the gue of Nations covenant have been vigorously disd, doubts have been cleared away, and the true ort of the engagements now awaiting the Senate's ification have been thrown out in bolder relief. Newser comment, previously hesitant and indeterminate, assumed a firmer tone, with a tendency to call for edy action. Great bodies of voters have welcomed the tunity to listen to the President's expositions, have en evidence of weighing his statements against the nents of the League opponents, and have ended by auding the President's point of view. Not even the prous and unfair reporting of the President's meetwith western audiences, such as that into which at one eastern newspaper was led by partisan rancor, been able to disguise the fact that the people who ned to the President in the west went to hear him h a great question in their minds and returned to their mes with their question answered.

The President has not dodged the issue. He has n himself ready to take up specific matters of doubt ne text or bearing of the treaty, and he has set himstraightforwardly to clear away the difficulty. It ificant, therefore, that the cumulative effect of his es has been, without doubt, to leave the whole subetter understood than before; whereas it cannot be d that the Senate dealings with the matter, meane, have tended rather to confuse the popular thought to clarify it. If effect may be accepted as any rantee of purpose, the purpose of much of the Senate ussion of the treaty can be more easily explained than nded. That the point of view of Senate opponents he treaty has won no such hearing in the west as the point of view of the President seems to have indicated by the fact that those opponents who it to follow him with counter-speeches found it ient to abandon their purpose.

In significance as well as in fact, California marked be culmination of the President's effort to move the country. In that State, which turned the scale for him in his last election, and in the face of the powerful influence of a Senator of national reputation from that State a leader of the opposition at Washington, the President met searching questions as to the effect of the treaty and answered those questions so effectively that he turned answered the assurance that California sentiment advised the treaty and the League. That Senator Johnson's effort to turn back this tide of opinion will have any considerable success is a matter of some doubt, in few of the challenging of the Senator's attitude by a action of his own constituents, in the telegram made ablic on Sunday from California educators and leaders opinion through the League to Enforce Peace.

ably the two greatest objections to the treaty ave been forced upon the President are, first, the on that the United States can be outvoted on mato be decided under the League covenant, and therecan be compelled to join with other nations contrary own wishes and interest; and, second, the objection ne League will, at some time or another, involve the y in war. In his answers to these objections the it goes far to answer all objections that can be ainst ratification. As to the voting power, the of six votes for the British Empire to one for ed States fades into nothing when it is underhat, under the terms of the treaty, the United s bound to be a party to all decisions of the League at any decision can be made of no effect if the States chooses to disapprove. It is the veto of a r nation that counts most, inasmuch as one adverse erthrows all those in favor. With this sweeping to block all League action by an objection, the States can hardly suffer disadvantage so long as

The Seamen's Strike in Australia

ALTHOUGH the dispatches now available recording the settlement of the long-drawn-out seamen's strike in Australia are not sufficiently detailed to allow of a complete estimate of the situation, enough is known to make it clear that the members of the Seamen's Union have accepted the government's offer as a basis of settlement. To what extent this may be considered an acknowledgment on the part of the men of the supreme authority of the Arbitration Court is not clear. But what is quite clear, to those who really understand the Labor situation in the Commonwealth, is that, in some way or another, the authority of the court must be thoroughly vindicated before the present temporary agreement, for it is only temporary, is consolidated into a final settlement. If this is not done a precedent will have been created which seriously endangers the position of the Arbitration Court as an effective institution, and throws back the industrial status of the country to where it was eighteen years ago. As Mr. Justice Higgins, president of the Arbitration Court, declared when the strike was at its height, and the seamen were openly defying his authority, "If the employers grant the claims of the men in such circumstances they and the community will rue the day.'

The more, indeed, the recent strike is examined, the more apparent does it become that it was no ordinary strike. It was not a strike with the simple straightforward end in view of securing a more just wage and better working conditions. It aimed at securing these, of course, and it has secured them. But, incidentally, or rather primarily, its leaders aimed at much more. When summoned to appear before the second compulsory conference, a few weeks ago, Mr. T. Walsh, secretary of the Seamen's Union, made his position clear enough. The seamen, he intimated quite bluntly to Mr. Justice Higgins, who presided, had "no use for his court or for arbitration." "You are out to perpetuate the capitalistic system," he declared in a burst of candor; "you are part of it; we are out to destroy it; there can be no parleying between us."

between us."

The whole strike was, of course, an aftermath of the great strike declared in the August of 1917. The extremist section of the Labor Party have never forgiven the federal government in general, and Mr. Hughes in-particular, for the drastic and successful measures they took, on that occasion, to put ah end to a condition which threatened to paralyze every national activity. It was evident, indeed, from the moment the strike was suppressed that the extremists would seize the very first opportunity that presented itself to force a trial of strength between themselves and the authorities. A seamen's strike appeared to them to present that opportunity. It was called at twenty-four hours' notice, and without any reference whatever to the Trades Hall. In spite of this high-handed action, the Industrial Disputes Committee of the Trades Hall attempted mediation. It failed. The Arbitration Court called two successive compulsory conferences. Both of them were abortive.

Meanwhile, the leaders of the Seamen's Union were doing their utmost to extend the dispute, with the quite obvious intention of working up a general strike, or, at any rate, of persuading the authorities that a general strike was imminent, and could only be avoided by conceding, in full, the seamen's demands. In all this they signally failed. The coal miners and other unions were strongly against being embroiled in a dispute concerning which they had never been consulted, and so, for the second time, the project of a general strike entirely failed. The seamen held on, however, and it was not until Walsh, who had been openly preaching sovietism, had been imprisoned "for aiding in the conduct of a strike" that a conference could be arranged and the matter settled.

The exact effect of the settlement, especially of the means by which it was reached, on the Labor situation in the Commonwealth, remains to be seen.

Sir Robert Borden's Message

ALTHOUGH no less was to be expected from Sir Robert Borden, there was something peculiarly statesmanlike about the message, which he sent to the recent National Industrial Conference in Ottawa. No more representative gathering could well have been devised than this one. The federal government, the provincial governments, the employers and employees of Canada all found a place there, and thus, from the standpoint of industry, the great meeting was truly national. Sir Robert Borden fully recognized this, and his message, far from partaking of the nature of a quasi-appeal to Labor to "stand by the Nation," was simply a presentation to a representative national body of a succinct statement of its own national affairs. Sir Robert made no attempt either to lighten or darken the picture. Canada had an immense task before her. She could unquestionably accomplish that task, but she could only do so in one way, namely, by bringing to bear upon the problems of peace "the unity of purpose and action, the persistence and determination, in short, the national spirit, which maintained her effort throughout the war.'

With businesslike thoroughness, the Canadian Premier then laid the facts before the conference. Five years ago the interest charged upon the federal debt of Canada was less than $13,000,000; today it is $115,000,000. In addition there will be, for many years to come, an annual charge of from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 to provide pensions for soldiers and for the dependents of those who have fallen. There will be deficits on the railways, demands for large capital charges in order to meet the cost of adequate expansion of these lines, and there will be many other calls incidental to a rapidly developing country. In some way or another these financial burdens will have to be met. They can only be met by increased production, and increased production can only be adequately secured by the utmost possible cooperation.

Few will be inclined to deny the justice of such a view as this. In a country like Canada, where the people, and by the people is meant the whole people of Canada, are free to place in power the government they please; to pass through a freely elected Parliament what laws they please; to make any arrangement that may seem good to them for the settling of disputes of any kind, the excuse for resort to war in the form of a strike simply does not exist. Canada is here afforded another opportunity to lead the way. "Untried in war," Sir Robert Borden said in conclusion, "Canada stood high amongst the nations in the organizations of her armies. I pray that in the organizations of peace activities her effort will be not less worthy nor less outstanding."

Educational Needs of Hawaii

WHEN one remembers that it was only just one hundred years ago that the little band of New England missionaries went to what were then called the Sandwich Islands, and only a scant generation ago that the native monarchical government there was superseded, it is hardly surprising that the superintendent of public instruction finds room for improvement in the Hawaiian educational system. Statements by this territorial official, Prof. Vaughan MacCaughey, recently published in this newspaper, indicate that he sees the Hawaiian educational problem in a distinctly practical which is an idealistic way. One of the most important features of this problem is evidently that of adaptation. The superintendent puts the matter plainly, as well as briefly, when he says that any school system which has the same curriculum, methods, and administration for city and for country serves neither city nor country effectively. Hawaii, he reminds one, is preeminently a rural country, with basic industries of the agricultural order. Her country schools, he sensibly declares, must be developed to serve the country, and not to drive young people into the city. This, he observes, accurately enough, has been found true on the mainland. Rural schools have, to a large extent, been merely miniature city schools. The mass of Hawaii's population, as he sees the island conditions, must be trained to live successfully and happily in the country, to earn their living by agriculture, and to develop a selfrespecting citizenship.

The head of the educational department of the government appreciates the fact that such a reform involves a definite readjustment of the rural schools, and no doubt he is right in the assertion that the most important steps to be taken are to obtain teachers whose homes and interests are rural, who understand rural life, and who can teach children in the terms of rural life; to give to the rural curriculum a large agricultural content; and to make the rural school a real community center. The rural schools, with trained, high-grade, well-paid, permanent teachers, Professor MacCaughey says, have before them a great field for service, a field thus far scarcely touched. Finally he declares that there should be general education in Hawaii, education to make good workmen, "toward the job, not away from it," to use his own expression.

It is difficult to see how the residents can dispute either the good sense or the economic importance of Professor MacCaughey's words, and since the Hawaiian people have shown themselves to be generous and enthusiastic supporters of education, his ideas will no doubt soon find expression in tangible form.

Ben Tillett

At a time in the great war when the allied cause was perhaps at its darkest, namely, in the latter days of 1917, there was a parliamentary by-election in the great working class constituency of North Salford, in England. The government candidate was a man altogether estimable. A Liberal of the old school, he was, almost before anything else, "perfectly sound" on the question of the war; whilst as an earnest advocate of the allied cause, he could and did speak eloquently in support of it.

The times, however, were dark. The artisans and dockers of North Salford had been working day and night, almost, for three and a half yea. They were impatient; not so much perhaps with the government as with themselves; impatient, in company with all the rest of their fellow countrymen, that they had not yet accomplished the tremendous task to which they had set their hands. They were longing for some one who would rouse them to greater effort, and point the way. They had even commandeered an old slang word for their great desire, and up and down the country, in the workshop and the factory, at home and abroad, ashore and afloat, in Parliament and out of it, one everywhere heard and overheard the word "ginger." Grave statesmen who would not have touched the phrase with a barge pole in a public utterance a few months before freely spoke of "the need for ginger." The people as a whole clamored for "ginger," and a parliamentary group which specially championed the cause emerged triumphantly into politics as the "Ginger Group."

Now the official Liberal candidate for North Salford, in the November of 1917, had everything else that could have been desired, but, in the opinion of the people of North Salford, he had not "ginger." And the people of North Salford demanded "ginger" before everything else. They got what they wanted, of course, all the Allies got it, but it first came to North Salford in the person of Benjamin Tillett. The moment the constituency received the news that the secretary of the Dock, Wharf, Riverside, and General Workers Union of Great Britain and Ireland was going to stand for North Salford as an Independent, North Salford knew that it had achieved its great desire. The hero of the dock strike of 1889, the fiery Labor leader of many parts, the onetime brick yard worker, merchant seaman, naval seaman, docker, and organizer of the Dockers Union, the man who, from the first day of the war, had thrown himself into the struggle on behalf of the Allies with all his accustomed and more than his accustomed prodigality of effort-this was the man in whom was to be found 'ginger" indeed, and he was the man for North Salford.

North Salford was not disappointed. The Labor leader's campaign was a veritable banquet of "ginger."
"A ruthless crusade against profiteering." "More efficient control of foodstuffs and more adequate distribution."

"A larger measure of popular government in the handling and control of shipping and transport," and, above all, a stern demand for "Reprisals on a gigantic scale" against Germany was all "ginger," most excellent "ginger." And North Salford returned Ben Tillett to Parliament by a vote of nearly two to one.

The whole incident was, of course, typical of the man. Ever since those early days, thirty years ago, when he worked as a docker on week days and preached as a lay reader of the Church of England on Sundays, Ben Tillett has always been full of "ginger" in support of any cause which he deemed right. He thought the war was just, and he gave in support of it all he had to give. He preached work, and he stood on the side of the worker. but the worker in a very broad-sense. And that is where he stands today. Ben Tillett has scant patience with the revolutionary millennium-monger. Few men see more clearly than he does that, whilst there is no short cut to reconstruction, there is a royal road to it, and that the name of that road is Work. "Labor," he declared recently, "has most to gain by a class loyalty, by patriotism, by love of country. All that industry, power, wealth, comfort, and happiness mean is wrapped up in patriotism."

Notes and Comments

The town library of Strasbourg has recovered the works of Saint Cyprian which had been absent from its shelves since 1870. They had, it is worth recording, been borrowed by a theological student, named Georges Macler, before the outbreak of war. After having done his duty by his country as a soldier he returned to his books. The Saint Cyprian was on his shelves with the Strasbourg library stamp, but Strasbourg was in German hands, and Georges Macler resolved to keep the Saint Cyprian in France until he could restore it to a Strasbourg once more French. That happy day having come, Mr. Georges Macler, pastor of Glay, in the Doubs department, for a number of years, set out with the Saint Cyprian for Alsace, and has had the pleasure of placing it in the hands of an Alsatian librarian.

DAYBREAK

In a jut of the rock a tiny tree in flower
Leans out on tiptoe through dark boughs of pine;
The south wind wakes and stirs and lazily blows
A glimmering flight of blossoms down the air.
The silver leap of a fish chimes in the dawn
And the broken lights of the pool flash into spray
That whirls among the petals as they fall.

Humorous incidents in connection with the war are not yet exhausted, and Ian Hay gives this one in his latest book, "The Last Million," in connection with the capture of a village from the Germans. A detachment of infantry arrived at the village only to find that a tank had beaten them by four minutes in the race to the market square. The usual young officer was in charge, and when the major came along he handed the village over to his superior officer, and then shyly asked for something to show, "just to show, sir, that we were here first." The major thought he could fix that, and solemnly wrote out a receipt: "Received from the officer commanding British tank Bing Boy one village, in poor condition."

As one might have expected, there are differences of opinion in the American press concerning the dropping of military titles, as officers who served in France return to civil life. Editor X approves highly; editor Y regards such titles as a kind of perquisite of patriotism which should not be taken away from those who have acquired it. The matter can be argued from either point of view with some plausibility, though editor Y, when he remarksthat "Mister," as compared with "General," Pershing would be "flat, tasteless, and unpalatable to a spirited community," seems to misstate the situation by assuming that it includes the regular United States Army and officers still in active service. Discussion flourishes; but one may believe that, whether or not those officers who left civil life to take part in the war and now come back to civil life again drop their military titles, spirited communities will settle the matter for themselves, and that "Mister." "Captain," "Colonel," or what not will be applied according to individual taste.

THE American traveler in China may nowadays be reminded of home by the new Chinese department store, but there is one thing about the department store in China that serves as a special reminder of other days and ways in America, to the American of an older generation. Modeled on the American department store, and dealing in many familiar commodities from the United States, the emporium in Hongkong or Shanghai still employs the cash boy, for the highest cost of cash boys in China still leaves their employment cheaper than the installation and maintenance of the overhead carrier. Otherwise the Chinese department store out-moderns western modernity, for it completes the universality of its equipment by selling hotel accommodations.

WISHING to reform the typical American newspaper, which he finds "essentially provincial and made up with a view to pleasing frivolous readers," a writer in a weekly periodical addresses serious advice to its subscribers in their capacity as members of the newspaper-reading public. The reform, he says, must "begin with you, the readers. You must first of all recognize your own frivolous and provincial tastes and resolve that you will seek and be interested in larger things than you now desire. When you come to the point of being dissatisfied with the daily food your newspaper sets before you, let both the editor and the publisher know it." Taken in conjunction with the writer's opinion that "the chances are that when you lay down the paper you have not read one word about anything that happened yesterday fifty miles away from vour home, except in the field of sports," he seems to have rather an amazing confidence that the "frivolous public" may perhaps take him seriously and set about following his directions.
